October 2022

Dear Colleagues and Friends:

Congratulations and much appreciation is extended to our faculty. Active scholarship supports excellent teaching and brings the excitement of new discoveries into the classroom. At Georgian Court University, we take pride in our faculty and appreciate those who remain current in their fields and continue to develop their expertise. Their work reinforces GCU’s commitment to creating an exceptional student experience. Please join me in celebrating the wide range of scholarship produced by the faculty over the 2021–2022 academic year. Included in this year’s issue of Faculty Focus are entries representing nearly 200 books, journal articles, conference presentations, grants, and art exhibitions.

While reviewing the breadth of scholarship, take note of the entries in blue. These entries represent work completed through faculty and student partnerships. Faculty-student collaboration, especially at the undergraduate level, is a focus at GCU and we are pleased at the growing participation in our Academic Excellence Celebration, a showcase of student scholarship. We know from national research that student participation in scholarship outside the classroom delivers pivotal experiences that shape their lives and careers. We applaud both the faculty and students in their determination to continue the tradition of research collaboration.

Wishing all a fulfilling academic year,

Janice Warner
Provost
Dr. Cathleen McQuillen, DPS
Associate Professor, School of Business & Digital Media

The 2022 Virginia Graham ’31 Award for Teaching Excellence

The past two years have been among the most challenging in recent history for college students, faculty, and staff. Educators like Cathleen McQuillen, DPS, associate professor in the Georgian Court University School of Business & Digital Media, responded to the call, quickly moving classes synchronously online. This technological online shift laid bare some of the significant difficulties students were navigating, including balancing remote learning with challenging home situations, socio-economic realities, and technology access. With an approach to meet students at their educational skill levels, Dr. McQuillen advocated for her students based on their specific needs to make this transition successful.

Back in class

Determined to get students back into the classroom to support learning success, Dr. McQuillen was one of the first instructors to begin holding in-person classes again in Fall 2020. This was achieved by providing synchronous learning for those students not coming to campus.

Helping Students Find their Way Back

Dr. McQuillen stays ahead of the curve when it comes to changes in the subjects she teaches. A change was recently made to the CPA exam, so she has been working with fellow educators on an interdisciplinary approach to help ensure students are thoroughly prepared.

A values-based approach

While Dr. McQuillen primarily teaches accounting classes, she also has a deep interest in fostering the Mercy Core Values that permeate GCU. This interest is fulfilled by teaching the general education capstone class. In all classes, and student interactions, Dr. McQuillen tries to live and weave the Mercy Core Values into her course work, a component she takes very seriously as an educator and part of the Georgian Court community.

As a lifelong learner, Dr. McQuillen is interested in researching new approaches to pedagogy to augment her teaching skills. Her hard work and dedication have been rewarded with the 2022 Virginia Graham ’31 Award for Teaching Excellence.
Michael Pawlish, PhD, knows through personal experience the positive impact one professor can have on a student’s life. While he was completing his Master of Business Administration (MBA) degree at San Francisco State University, he met weekly with a professor to discuss research. The two formed a friendship. “It was like my own Tuesdays with Morrie,” he says, referring to the bestselling book about a man and his mentor. He also holds a Master of International Environmental Science from Lund University.

While it was challenging to juggle his work and studies in his 40s, Dr. Pawlish later returned to earn his doctorate in environmental management, which had long been an area of interest for him. He worked in sales and as an environmental business consultant, but he never forgot his mentor’s impact. And when he joined Georgian Court University as an assistant professor of management in the School of Business & Digital Media (SBDM), he immediately embraced opportunities to help and guide students in similar ways. (He had previous engagements as an adjunct professor and visiting assistant professor.)

In just his second year as a full-time faculty member, Dr. Pawlish served as an advising fellow. He also serves as a faculty representative on the SBDM Executive Advisory Council, which connects the business school to local and regional industry leaders, works on strategic matters and serves as a resource to students, faculty, and staff.

One of Dr. Pawlish’s key areas of focus is sustainable business—an area in which he consulted. He has conducted a steady stream of research on corporate social performance and sustainability and has written a chapter of a book that is expected to be published next year. He says this work informs his classroom instruction and helps him impart to his students the importance of sustainable business practices.

He also helped develop a minor in leadership, along with SBDM Associate Professor Ashley Elmore Bosonac, PhD, and Dean Jennifer Edmonds, PhD. The minor will include classes in leadership, diversity and ethics, and others, as well as a capstone project. The first classes will be offered in Fall 2022.

“It’s often said that most companies are over-managed and under-led. We wanted to have a broad leadership minor that includes different disciplines and focuses on building different leadership skills for Georgian Court students,” he says.
Joan Harvey, DNP
Director of the Accelerated Bachelor of Science in Nursing (ABSN) Program

When students take a class with Joan Harvey, DNP, they know two things: her demand for excellence and her mobile phone number. Dr. Harvey is a visiting professor and director of the new Accelerated Bachelor of Science in Nursing (ABSN) program at Georgian Court University, is dedicated to her students' success and makes herself "on call" when they need her.

That may be part of the reason why Harvey’s first class of ABSN had a 100 percent graduation rate in February. Her “Helpful Harvey Hints,” which is a collection of useful information and tips she’s identified through her years of nursing practice and teaching let students benefit from her hard-won experience.

Dr. Harvey is also the former geriatric program manager and currently a nurse scientist at Hackensack Meridian Health System, where she supported clinicians’ geriatric education and coordination to improve the care of older adults in the health system. Geriatric nursing is close to her heart, and she was recently appointed vice chair of the Gerontological Content Expert Panel for the American Nurses Credentialing Center. In this role, she helps ensure that the content and rigor of the organization’s geriatric specialty exam are appropriate.

For Dr. Harvey, nursing isn’t just a profession. It’s a calling. “I have a very strong religious faithful background. I am so passionate about nursing and the way it should be,” she says. She tells her students to think of the being they love most in the world, whether it’s their mother or father or even their cat. “However, you want them taken care of is how you must take care of people,” she says. “When you look into the eyes of a patient, I want you to see me. Remember what I taught you,” she says.

“Our culture seemingly does not cherish the older adults, as many other cultures around the world do. We can learn so much from an older adult, by their lived experiences,” she says. Dr. Harvey helps identify their challenges. For example, overcoming barriers to communication such as hearing loss can help older adults be more engaged with the people around them. Early detection and prevention of delirium is also a significant focus of Harvey’s education for nurses and interdisciplinary teams who care for patients.

Earlier this year, Dr. Harvey presented a Gerontological Nursing Certification review course at Christiana Health. In addition, she is active as a member of a team at Hackensack Meridian Health conducting qualitative research, including “The Lived Experience of Nurses During the Pandemic” and “Staffing During the Pandemic.”
